01:988:408 / 12164:90	Impacts of Economic Inequality on Women's Health		3
Professor Erin Evans Domestic and global economic inequality place significant numbers of people at high risk for health crises even as they are denied access to care. This course investigates the "pathogenic" aspects of gender and economic inequality; how systems of unequal resource distribution contribute to wide disparities of health risk, access to healthcare, and clinical outcomes; and how global trade and trans-national migration affect health costs, healthcare delivery systems, and the availability of healthcare professionals.
01:988:409 / 20192:90	The Growth Imperative, Global Ecology, and Women's Health		3
Professor Julia Wartenberg In the last quarter century, the premise of the possibility of endless growth for the purpose of unlimited capital accumulation has met the inevitable challenges of resource exhaustion on a global scale and its human consequences. Markets and technological innovation are inadequate to solve the resulting environmental crises. This course examines the externalized business costs paid in the currency of human health and health consequences such as illness caused by toxic industrial byproducts, injury from resource extraction processes such as nuclear fission and deep-water oil drilling, manifold health hazards of violent conflict over control of scarce resources in postcolonial states, and dangers that attend climate change.
01:988:410 / 20191:90	Debt, Crisis, and Women's Health		3
Professor Julia Wartenberg Growing national debt has become a feature of increasing numbers of nations over the past 60 years, heightening dependence on international financial institutions, restricting the sphere of freedom of national policy makers and, consequently, severely cutting healthcare provisions. This course unsettles the conventional moral calculus of credit and debt, exploring the relationship between debt and economic crisis and examining the impacts of austerity policies on women's health.

By checking this box I certify that I have visited the website for the Office of the Registrar, have reviewed and will follow the Policies and Procedures, including information on tuition and fees, schedule revisions and deadlines. I also understand that I am fully liable for all university tuition and/or fees associated with my registration and will make payment or arrangements for payment suitable to the university prior to attendance and will not receive confirmation of registration until such time as payment has been received.
