

16:988:520 Agency, Subjectivity, and Social Change

M 12:35-3:35 // RDJC 011 C/D

Dr. Nikol Alexander-Floyd

This course examines women's efforts to change political and social structures and norms. It examines social movement activity, in the past and the present, and across geographical and social locations, and interrogates the role of subjectivity in the expression of other forms of political agency, as well. Central to our inquiry will be the relationship between informal and formal politics and the ways in which frames, codes, and ideology provide critical tools for and form the backdrop of political engagement.