

National Nurses United and the Department of Women's and Gender Studies at Rutgers, The State University of New Jersey, introduce Global Women's Health Movements

for an online certificate program in Women's Global Health Leadership. Global Women's Health Movements is offered online through Rutgers University eCollege during the fall semester of 2014.

Global Women's Health Movements (Course Number 01:988:407) identifies the global institutions and policies that most impact health. Students will discern how women's non-governmental organizations have attempted to transform existing institutions and policies of global health governance such that people everywhere can lead healthier and more dignified lives. The course encourages students to forge new ground by drawing connections among institutions of global governance and women's health by examining how women's organizations around the world have fought to actualize universal access to healthcare.

Rutgers, the State University of New Jersey

If you have any questions about the course, please contact Janelle Fine, Certificate Program Administrative Coordinator, at WGHL@nationalnursesunited.org before August 15.