

SPRING 2019

Feminist Knowledge Production

16:988:603 Index 11135

Monday 3:55 - 6:55

This seminar introduces students to multiple epistemologies and methodologies that have enabled feminist scholarship. We adopt a broad, multifaceted definition of the field and consider how feminist studies informs and is informed by other areas of inquiry. Our approach is both constructive and critical, as we examine how various ways of organizing knowledge and different research strategies alternately enable and foreclose forms of knowing. The course aims to expand students' fluency in multiple ways of knowing, while providing the support for developing viable research proposals that reflect students' interests and commitments. For more information or special permission numbers, email gerson@rutgers.edu.