This online course introduces students to the basic concepts, discussions and intersections related to gender, race and sexualities. Through readings, media resources, and movies we will observe and understand the ways in which gender, race and sexuality are intertwined in everyday life, and how this relates to broader social problematics in society. Together, we will observe and analyze our socio-cultural context to understand how certain norms, values, practices and “common sense” of what it means “to be” within certain social constructions have constantly limited our imagination and affected our practices of gender/sex, race, ethnicity, nationality, amongst other labels. The course is 100% online and interactive with multiple tools and resources for student to review and participate in discussion, and promotes the developments of critical thinking as well as creative skills.

It is expected that the student, through critical thinking applied to the social reality are able to understand how these topics are part of a major economic-political-social-cultural system grounded historically that create and reproduces oppression, inequality, stereotypes, and discrimination.
This online course introduces students to the basic concepts, discussions and intersections related to gender, race and sexualities. Through readings, media resources, and movies we will observe and understand the ways in which gender, race and sexuality are intertwined in everyday life, and how this relates to broader social problematics in society. Together, we will observe and analyze our socio-cultural context to understand how certain norms, values, practices and “common sense” of what it means “to be” within certain social constructions have constantly limited our imagination and affected our practices of gender/sex, race, ethnicity, nationality, amongst other labels.

The course is 100% online and interactive with multiple tools and resources for student to review and participate in discussion, and promotes the development of critical thinking as well as creative skills.